

THE MORNING APPEAL.

FRIDAY FEBRUARY 14

THE STARTING MACHINE.

For the last three years Col. Lopez, of Australia, has been trying to induce the turfmen of San Francisco to adopt a machine for starting horses in a race.

Everybody opposed it. The salaried men are very strong in San Francisco and they hate innovations of all kinds. They said the machine never could work; it was a humbug and a fraud, and all who advocated it were cranks. But Lopez was persistent and last Tuesday it was tried. Now everybody is cursing the track management for not trying it before.

When the start was made the people in the grand stand cheered.

Here is what the Bulletin says:

The starting machine made no mistakes yesterday. Its exhibition was simply phenomenal and horsemen are now singing songs in its praise. They had heard what great things it had worked on the islands, but little did they dream that it would send away ten bad acting jumpers in perfect order, and best of all, required only two minutes to get them in motion. The fact certainly approached the miraculous: surely nothing like it ever occurred in America before. Even if it was a chance start it will take time to persuade the spectators' minds that the machine is a failure. Above all things, the public will now demand that it be given a complete and fair trial, and undoubtedly it will receive this without any appeal to the managers of the Ingleside track. In fact, the magnates were more enthusiastic over its success than the audience.

That the innovation was put to the severest test few will question. The field was large, and moreover, was composed of a collection of horses noted for their song-and-dance work at the post; and again, the jockeys were strangers to the flying apparatus. Notwithstanding these handicaps, Mr. Lopez in turn his field and got them off nose and nose apart inside of two minutes—a wonderful feat.

The machine will start every horse fresh and will lower records. Many a good horse is worn out with false starts before he gets the flag, and many a good horse gets off several lengths to the bad by the uncertainty of starting. The machine has come to stay.

The Kentucky Senatorship.

The feature of the Kentucky Senatorial fight is the freedom with which party ties are thrown aside. The Republican candidate came within one vote of an election recently, through the aid of Democratic and Populist votes. While Democrats are going over to a Republican aspirant who, in comparison with the Democratic candidate, is unknown, nine Democrats refuse to vote for Blackburn because of his silver views. People are puzzled to know why these nine gold Democrats are so ready to raise the financial question above all others. One would suppose that a Silver Democrat would be preferred by Democrats to a gold Republican.

The leading Democratic journals in Kentucky applaud the firmness of the nine. Watterson, who used to see no good in the best of Republicans, now lends the influence of his name and paper to a plan of battle which will end in the election of a Republican Senator or a failure to elect. Not only is the Solid South broken, but the Democratic party in the South has gone to pieces.

The Salt Lake Tribune last week contained an editorial article condemning Senator Tillman for using the plain language he did in his speech arraigning President Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle. If there was more of that kind of talk the country would be the gainer by it. Senator Tillman in the beginning of his speech said he was the only farmer in the United States Senate, so far as he knew, and as there are 35,000,000 of farmers in this country he proposed to speak plainly and bluntly and use Anglo-Saxon, the language of the common people, for he said he was one of them, and he expected to tell the Senate how they feel, and what they think, and what they want.

The strength of the spirit of independence that has been roused among the Cubans is shown by the fact that women fight side by side with the men in the ranks of the insurgents. In Collazo's force in a recent encounter with General Molina there were thirty-eight women dressed as men armed with machetes and revolvers. Twelve others carried rifles and fought in the vanguard.

Such deeds of valor recall the day when Molly Pitcher loaded and fired a field piece after her husband was dead alongside the gun. People who struggle for independence after that fashion deserve it.
